

Only few are left from the Vedant which was once so common among the people. The Vedas were written by sages who had attained knowledge through their own efforts.
 They were passed down from generation to generation, and were never written down until about 500 B.C.
 When they were first written, they were written in Sanskrit, which was the language of the Brahmins. It was a very difficult language to learn, and it was only the Brahmins who could understand it. This made them very powerful, and they used their power to keep the other classes of society under control.
 The Vedas were divided into four parts: the Rigveda, the Yajurveda, the Samaveda, and the Atharvaveda.
 Each part contained hymns, prayers, and rituals. The Rigveda was the oldest, and it contained the most hymns. The Yajurveda was the second oldest, and it contained more rituals than hymns. The Samaveda was the third oldest, and it contained mostly melodies for singing. The Atharvaveda was the youngest, and it contained spells and charms. The Vedas were very important to the Brahmins, and they were treated with great respect. They were considered to be the word of God, and they were used to guide the lives of the people. However, over time, the Vedas became less and less important. People began to look for other ways of knowing the truth, and the Vedas were eventually forgotten. Today, only a few people know anything about the Vedas, and even fewer can read them. This is a great loss, because the Vedas contain some of the greatest wisdom ever known to man.

[illegible]

[illegible]

See memo attached to [unclear] [unclear]
[unclear] [unclear] [unclear] [unclear]
[unclear] [unclear] [unclear] [unclear]

115 - My dear Reginald and Rachel -

[illegible]

al celo delo como a los lores sonaun de los garb. la una que pide el vago

Diego de la Cruz

Passo Annon

Harvey K. H.

que por lo tanto el cuerpo de este a la vez que los otros se señala (o) como a los barones

[Illegible handwritten text]